Remember, it costs time and money to set up a research interview. If you have made it this far, it is because the company thinks you are a viable candidate. When you receive an interview, the onus is on you to perform detailed research into the position and the company. After all, it is your research skills that have got you into this situation in the first place! Below, we offer a few research assistant interview questions and suitable answers to some of them. Please note that our answers are merely designed to give you an idea of what to say. We don't recommend using what we have written word-for-word! List of Questions and Answers for a Research Assistant Why Are You Interested in this Position? The interview wants to see if your career goals are a good fit for the position. It seems like an excellent opportunity to build the specific skills I want to learn in my career while working in an industry I love. I have performed a similar role for the last three years but aim to contribute to the efforts of an expanding enterprise like ACME Limited. Tell Me About Yourself? Offer a short introduction, express your career goals, mention some qualifications, and show that you are a good fit. I'm a diligent research assistant with seven years' experience. To date, I have worked with leading scientists in a bid to find better ways to treat cancer. Although I love my current role, I am ready to move into a different branch of science, and this position excites me. Describe the Hardest Situation You Faced & Outline the Steps You Took to Resolve the Issue? The company wants to know how you handle toxic work situations. The STAR method works well here. I was the second lead of a study into cancer cells. The study's lead became extremely ill just before a meeting, where we were requesting additional funding. I pored through his notes and performed the presentation. Ultimately, we received the money we needed to finish the research. Describe Your Computer Experience? I am an expert in the use of Windows and Apple operating software. I have used both during my career to date. How Would Previous Colleagues Describe You? In this question, the hiring manager wants to see if you are a good team player or a leader. In the past, my colleagues opined that I am extraordinarily well-organised and excel in time management. During one project, we encountered numerous problems yet we completed the task on time. The company's executives praised me for leading the way in offering solutions. More possible research assistant interview questions: What is innovative about your research Who has influenced you the most? What are the most significant issues in your field of research? Provide us with a two-minute overview of what your research is about. Do you have any experience in attracting funding? In the past, you have only gathered minimal funding. How do you plan to bring in more significant amounts? Why do you feel you are ready for this position? If you are hired, how do you plan to run your research project? Do you plan to build a research group? If so, how many people do you need for it to be optimal? Have you ever performed committee work? If so, what challenges have you faced? Interview Questions to Ask the Interviewer Here is a list of good questions to ask at an interview. In the end, you get the opportunity to prove that you are genuinely interested in the position. Hiring managers are not impressed by candidates who don't ask anything when the interview concludes. They see it as a sign of an applicant that is either underprepared or disinterested. It is also a good idea to ask a few questions to see if the job is the right fit for you. Too many people fall into the trap of 'taking any role' and often end up miserable. Don't let it happen to you. Without further do, here are a few essential questions to ask. Why is this position open? What do you like or dislike about the organisation? Where is the company likely to be in 5-10 years? What is the firm's definition of 'success,' and how do you measure it? What are the biggest challenges in this role? Luckily, being well prepared is a great way to reduce stress on the big day and increase your chances of being hired. To make sure you're well prepared, follow these top 10 tips on how to interview well.Top 10 Interview TipsTip #1 – Research the company in advanceThis is at the top of our interview tips list for a reason. It's absolutely critical to do thorough research on the companyCorporationA corporation is a legal entity created by individuals, stockholders, or shareholders, with the purpose of operating for profit. Corporations are allowed to enter and its people before walking into the company. This can be one of the biggest differentiators of outstanding versus merely good interviewees. The most important things to research are the company history, their business model, recent press releases, their management teamCorporate StructureCorporate structure refers to the organization of different departments or business units within a company. Depending on a company's goals and the industry, financial informationThree Financial StatementsThe three financial statements are the income statement, the balance sheet, and the statement of cash flows. These three core statements are (if public), competitors, reputation, and any mutual connections you might have.Having all these areas researched well means you can have meaningful and insightful conversations in the interview, and you won't be nervous in asking questions about the company.Tip #2 – Practice telling your storyThe interviewer is extremely likely to ask you something along the lines of "walk me through your resume," or "why should we hire you," or "what makes you a good candidate for this role." All of these are versions of the same thing, which is to succinctly tell your story in a way that makes sense to the interviewer.One of the best interview tips is to, instead of simply listing all the jobs you've had and what you did in the past, think of a common theme that ties all your experience together. This theme will bring your story to life and make you really stand out from other candidates.Tip #3 – Prepare a list of questions to askIt's a good idea to have a list of questions for the interviewer written down in advance. This not only shows you're well prepared but will also make you much more relaxed, knowing that you have lots of things to talk about if you're put on the spot.Try to prepare questions on a wide range of topics, including the technical nature of the work, the culture of the company, and what's happening in the industry. Whenever someone asks us how to interview well, we insist they prepare a list of questions to ask the company!Tip #4 – Practice answering questions with friends or familyPractice makes a huge difference, and it's important to rehearse as many times as possible before the big day. Answering questions in your head is not the same as answering them out loud to someone else, so be sure to practice with a friend or family member who can give you honest feedback. Ask them to tell you where you can improve on everything from content to tone and mannerisms. This interview tip is very important to follow through on. Even though most people have an idea in their head of how to interview well, they often don't end up delivering on the big day because they didn't put in the hard work of practicing. Make sure you practice with real people!Tip #5 – Read the headlines on the day of the interviewThis is one of our secret interview tips because not many people do it and it gives you a lot of opportunities to make small chat and come across as well informed. The easiest way to break the ice or fill a silence is to comment on a recent news headline.Try to avoid having a very polarizing view or opinion on anything, but rather, show you're up to date on current events and offer a balanced opinion.If you feel that you need to break an awkward silent situation, you can easily say something like, "Did you see that the Bitcoin was down over 10% again this morning?," as an easy conversation starter.Tip #6 – Arrange your clothes and supplies in advanceThis ritual can help you mentally prepare and is a great way to reduce stress on the day of the interview. You don't want to be rushing to iron your shirt when you're supposed to be heading out the door or discover that your shoes need shining when you're about to leave.It's a good idea to dress one notch above the level you think the people interviewing you will be wearing. If you're not sure, then it's better to be overdressed than underdressed.Tip #7 – Arrive extra early but don't check in until it's timeBeing late for an interview is one of the worst first impressions you can make. Given that it's totally avoidable with good preparation, make sure you plan your transportation the day before and aim to arrive earlier than you think you need to.While you should arrive at the building early, it's not a good idea to check in more than a few minutes before the scheduled interview time. Wait just outside the building until it's time to go up to avoid waiting in the lobby of the office for a long time. If there's one thing on this list of interview tips that you don't ever want to miss, it's being on time.Tip #8 – Listen intently to everything everyone says to youThis is one of the most important interview tips that surprisingly few people focus on. It's really critical to be a good listener to everyone, from the receptionist to the people interviewing you. Focusing on your listening will do a few things. First, it will take your mind off of thinking about what to say next, which will help you relax and perform better. Second, you will do a better job of answering questions by paying attention to every word in the question that was asked of you.It may seem obvious, but focusing really hard on being a good listener is very important and something that many people who are wondering how to interview well forget about. On interview day, make a reminder or note to yourself (consider putting this on your list of questions) that says "Listen!"Tip #9 – Take a few notes, as necessaryDuring the formal portion of the interview, it can be a good idea to take some notes. This will help you remember important points and also show you're engaged and paying close attention.It's not a good idea, however, to take copious notes and write down anything and everything. That can actually be a bit off-putting for the interviewer and means you will likely not be making any eye contact with them.Find the right balance of note-taking to stay focused, but without overdoing it.Tip #10 – Be aware of your body languageThis is a big interview tip. Body language says a lot about you, as we automatically pay a lot of attention to non-verbal communication. It's important to be aware of everything from facial expressions and eye contact to head nodding, arm movements, and posture.Be sure to avoid slouching, crossing your arms, and too much/little eye contact. These three are arguably the biggest or most likely things to be noticed by the interviewer.The goal is to project confidence, engage, and build a rapport with the interviewer(s).Additional resources on how to interview wellThank you for reading this list of CFI's top 10 interview tips.
